SCHOOL REPORT.

As thy servants it now becomes us to give an account of our stewardship, and in doing so allow us to say, we organized and maintained six schools, which have been taught an average of thirty weeks, with the exception of one of our small schools, where some of the pupils could not attend during the winter term, and this was given twenty-two weeks divided into two terms. This, you will observe, is nearly as many weeks of school as last year, and taught by the same teachers, although the appropriation was four hundred and seventy dollars less.

These facts are an argument in favor of consolidation of schools, which perhaps the fault-finding ones have not thought of. Besides a saving of the funds, there is another advantage to both teacher and pupil in having a school of thirty, where each will stimulate the other, which cannot be gained in a small school of six or seven.

There is another argument in favor of consolidation, but one that is evidently overlooked. For a moment consider the cost of maintaining a separate school, as compared with the cost of conveying the pupils to another school. One year ago it cost in No. 9, four dollars and fifty cents per week for teacher, two dollars and twenty-five cents for board, one dollar for supplies and furnishings, making a total of seven dollars and seventy-five cents. This year we conveyed the pupils to the village school, without apparent harm to any one, at a cost of three dollars and fifty cents per week, thus saving four dollars and twenty-five cents.

In No. 6, one year ago, it cost three dollars and fifty cents per week for teacher, two dollars for board, one dollar for supplies and furnishings, making a cost of six dollars and fifty cents per week, while this year it has cost two dollars and fifty cents per week to educate the same pupils. In No. 7, where they had more and better schooling, with a saving of four dollars per week, which, added to the amount saved from No. 9, gives eight dollars and twenty-five cents per week, or an average of two and two fifths weeks' schooling for each of the six schools maintained. As in former years, it has been our aim to furnish the best teachers possible for the wages paid; consequently, with one exception, we have retained those of last year, and they have labored zealously for the good of all. From our standpoint the position of the teacher is one of great responsibility, and she must not only teach the pupil a lesson from the text-book, but instil into the mind a love for all that is good and abhorrence of all that is evil. In this work they must first of all have the support of the school board, and secondly that of the parents and guardians of the pupils; for the small amount of the town's money paid can never compensate for the services rendered by her who does her duty to the children entrusted to her care. Time was when children were sent to school and told by their parents to obey the rules of the school, assured at the same time that if they were punished at school and came home to tell of it, they would be punished again, and some of us can testify to the fact that the promise was fulfilled; but now too many, when required to conform to the regulations of the school, stay away, and are borne out in their action by the parent or guardian. Such conduct has, in some cases, been well nigh disastrous to the school; but believing that the teacher has the same authority to correct for wrong doing in school as the parent or guardian at home, we have unitedly supported the teacher. There are a few cases in town where pupils do not fulfil the requirements of the law relating to the attendance of school, but it does no good to talk with the parents. In one of our schools, during a term of twelve weeks in the fall of the year when all could attend, out of an enrolment of thirty-one pupils there were four hundred and sixty-two days' absences and sixty-seven tardy marks, thirty-one of these marks being against one pupil, and another pupil was present only fourteen days during the entire term.

Possibly there may be a reasonable excuse for a large part of the absences, but who will offer an apology for tardiness? The above instance, we are happy to say, is an exception and not a rule, for as a whole the percentage of daily attendance has increased and tardiness has greatly diminished. The badges which we have been giving during the past three years, have been a great stimulus to many, whose names you will find recorded in the Roll of Honor table. Twenty have been neither tardy nor absent during the year, while one hundred and fifty-six have been enrolled for one or more terms. Besides these, there have been five of whom it is our pleasure to make honorable mention, who have been absent only two half days during the year.

As an additional inducement to punctuality, the school board and teachers gave a Roll of Honor party on the evening of the last day of school, so that all those who had been so unfortunate as to be absent for three half days might enjoy an evening socially.

In the matter of supplies we have been obliged to expend $204.30. We have furnished new books for the beginners in history, the advanced classes in physiology, and exchanged the old, worn-out geographies and grammars, which has met the demands of the pupils and the approval of the teachers.

As a whole, the teachers and scholars have done good work, and the government has been gained largely through love rather than fear, which is to be encouraged.

As the retiring member of the board, I wish to say the three years' service has, upon the whole, been both pleasant and profitable. I have learned many lessons, and formed many acquaintances that are valuable. The children, especially, have always given me a cordial greeting, and the time spent with them will be among the pleasant recollections of the work. As a school board I have never found a more harmonious body to work with anywhere. In all cases we have given our decisions by a majority of the board, and not by any one member thereof, believing that, in the mouth of two or three witnesses, every word is to be established. By the removal of Doctor Fox from town there was a vacancy in the board, which was filled by the appointment of Charles W. Abbott, who has rendered valuable service. To all — teachers, pupils, and parents — we tender our best wishes.
